The purpose of this book is to provide the reader with a thorough grounding in the central ideas and techniques of panel data, and to give the tools required to carry out an empirical analysis. This book is a result of many recent empirical studies using this technique, especially in the areas of economics, banking, finance, accounting or even social sciences. Nowadays, there are many datasets in the form of panel or longitudinal, and this book is to help who need panel data analysis skills in doing their research. This book mainly focuses on the short panels data analysis, which is different from the long time-series panels. From the practical or applied point of view, the book is innovative in two ways, i.e. it presents the statistical tests step by step to estimate the model specification using Stata software, and interpret the empirical findings and relate with the hypothesis. The sample datasets used in this book are based on the real actual data which made the results related to meaningful findings.

The Malaysian Palm Oil Board has successfully invented a dihydroxyl fatty acid based on palm oil based oleic acid which has been named 9, 10-dihydroxystearic acid [9, 10-DHSA]. Due to the development of the oleochemical industry in Malaysia, palm based unsaturated fatty acids (especially oleic acid) are easily available and provide an easy source of raw materials for this invention. However, this invention is also applicable to oleic acids derived from other types of oils and/or fats. The said dihydroxystearic acid (OHSA) is a specialty chemical, derived from epoxidation of oleic acid with either peracetic or performic acid followed by hydrolysis with hydrogen donors such as water. Currently, palm oil based crude OHSA is prepared in a pilot plant located in the premises of the Malaysian Palm Oil Board, at the rate of 500kg OHSA per batch run. OHSA is used as primary and secondary emulsifiers, coating agent for pigments and gelling agent for oils and/or fats in coloured cosmetics formulations and research.

Forecasting Methods: The Needs of Policymakers is about quantitative forecast focusing on mathematical model building for positive time series data. This book aims to bridge between the sophisticated nature of statistical modelling and forecasting velocity and veracity which is the next door to public policy development. For this purpose, in this book, the authors try to put statistical tools on "dining table" without going into the details but still reveal the statistical soul. The readers will find that its content is about action to take the benefit from data or information in a simple way with desired accuracy. Furthermore, since the policy makers consider "velocity" at the highest priority and "veracity" or "forecast quality" as a never ending process, whatever the data or information they use to make a forecast high velocity in constructing a desired time series model will be the focus of the book. This book designed not only for policy makers but also for those who are working with or studying positive time series modelling. Its contents are easy to digest and no special skill in statistics is required.

Mentoring for Youth Development

Lee Kwan Meng, Turiman Suandi & Steven Eric Krauss

978-967-344-823-4

224 pages

RM55.00 · 2018

Many books have been written on the concepts and perspectives of mentoring, most in the context of mentoring in the workplace with the goal of helping workers develop in their careers. Mentoring youth is different, however. The purpose of mentoring youth is to facilitate young people's personal development through non-formal learning as a form of extension education. Despite the vast number of youth mentoring programmes around, the topic has not received the depth of coverage it deserves, particularly for those working in non-Western settings. "Mentoring for Youth Development" presents a new perspective and insight on mentoring youth that is firmly grounded in diverse theoretical traditions. More practically, it points out the do's and don'ts and pitfalls of mentoring today's youth. It provides an academic backdrop to the practice, yet also acts as a reference for practitioners. The "What is" is the primary direction of this book, yet it also discusses the "How to's" of mentoring young people.

The ideas that were implemented to enhance the department were not new. We did not invent or reinvent concepts; we merely learnt and adapted them with a large dose of common sense. Our shared success was made possible by men and women who saw themselves first and foremost as life savers and dedicated fighters. To create momentum, leveraged the strength of a united purpose and culture, which is comprised of the shared values, beliefs, traditions and behavioural norms within the group. For an organization to be strong, equal emphasis must be given to developing both leaders and teams to create synergies in the performance of the duties..

Traditional Anthropological Performance Healing in Malaysia

RM120.00 · 2018

Traditional healing rituals are now fast disappearing in the face of modern medicine. Remnants of such healing techniques can however be found in the rural societies of Kelantan, Terengganu, Kedah, Johor, Sabah and Sarawak, patronized mainly by the older generations who still believe in the animistic spiritual world. These traditional healing rituals will eventually fade into oblivion as they will become irrelevant in the modern digital robotic age where medical advances can purportedly address every conceivable form of illness through invasive and non-invasive interventions. This book is an effort to document and preserve the memories of traditional healing as cultural and spiritual expressions of the various tribal and ethnic communities. A unique aspect of such therapeutic medicine is that it not only cures but also entertains as it incorporates performance elements of music, chanting, dance and drama in the healing process.

This book addresses the level of heavy metals accumulation in Tilapia sp. exposed to municipal solid waste landfill leachate and the health risk associated through consumption. It highlights the exposure of waste leachate to fish and how it leaves a significant impact on human. The uncontrolled production and discharge of untreated landfill leachate pose environmental pollution. Leachate from waste contains hazardous contaminants such as heavy metals that are passed into the food chain through fish bioaccumulation and end up in human bodies. Tilapia is a type of fish that can adapt to a wide range of pollutants in various water conditions and are resistant to disease. It has high market demand for its edible nature and it is also vulnerable to leachate contamination. Based on the findings of this research, the risk of heavy metals accumulation in fish highly occurred in the gills followed by the muscle (the edible part that we eat). A probable health risk exists from heavy metals exposure of municipal waste landfill leachate through fish consumption.

275 pages · 2019

This book was written as a reference book to explain the performance of various aggregate filler types and sizes in Stone Mastic Asphalt mixtures. Fillers are typically fine powders with particle size distribution in the range of 1-100 microns. They can be naturally occurring materials such as limestone (calcium carbonate), manufactured fillers such as carbon black or derived from industrial wastes such as fly ash and recycled fillers in the form of so-called baghouse fines that have also been frequently used. Mineral fillers in hot mix asphalt is an important component of the mixture as the design and performance of hot mix asphalt (HMA) concrete is greatly influenced by the nature and amount of the mineral filler in the mix, where an excess quantity of filler tends to increase stability, brittleness and proclivity to cracking. This book may be of great benefit to practicing engineers, academics and research students.

Noritah Omar

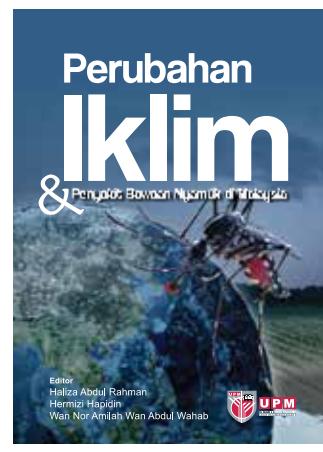

978-967-344-937-8

RM55.00

306 pages · 2019

This book spotlights incarceration as an act of "compassionate intention" for juveniles. It narrates in detail a doctoral study which used narrative inquiry to investigate the construction of self-identity by incarcerated female adolescents involved in a storytelling program in a juvenile detention facility. A combination of critical theory, feminism, and the Islamic religious views of the researcher served as the theoretical and methodological foundation of the study. The study highlights how the social and institutional surveillance which constantly framed the lives of these incarcerated adolescents tended to preserve their low sense of status and to undermine their sense of intellectuality. The study also shows how the participants' self-identity constructions can be directly associated with critical literacy, thus providing a means for empowerment through narrative as a form of self-inquiry, a stage for confrontation, and a channel for personal revelations.
