Checklist of the Parasites of Fishes of Malaysia

J. Richard Arthur & Mohamed Shariff

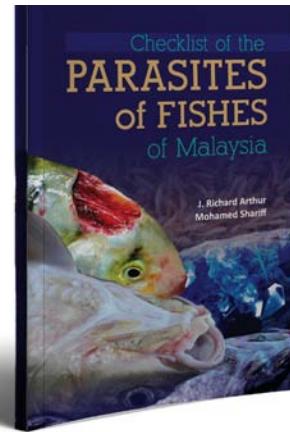

ISBN : 978-967-344-395-6

2015

RM65.00

The study of fish parasites in Malaysia dates back to more than a century, when a report on the Crustacea collected during the Cambridge University "Skeat Expedition" to the Malay Peninsula in 1899 – 1900 described the presence of parasitic isopod infecting freshwater fish. However, following this report no systematic studies on Malaysian fish parasites were done until the 1960s, when modern research on the country's fish parasites began.

This book compiles the dedicated efforts of several Malaysian fish parasitologists and their students, who have published extensively on the taxonomy, lifecycles, ecology, pathology and treatment of parasites of freshwater and marine fishes. Also included are the many taxonomic and other studies conducted by foreign scientists, working both in Malaysia and in international laboratories.

This checklist includes all pertinent literature dating from the year 1902 when the first record appeared through the end of 2013. Information is presented in the form of parasite-host and host-parasite lists. Included are 425 named species of parasite, distributed among the higher taxa as follows: Protista – 18, Myxozoa – 22, Digenea – 39, Monogenoidea – 207, Cestoda – 72, Nematoda – 24, Acanthocephala – 4, Hirudinida – 1, Branchiura – 4, Copepoda – 26, Isopoda – 6 and Pentastomida – 2. Also included are many records of parasites not identified to species level.

The Parasite-Host List is organized on a taxonomic basis and provides information for each parasite species on the environment (freshwater, brackishwater, marine), the location (site of infection) in or on its host(s), the species of host(s) infected, the known geographic distribution (by state) in Malaysia, and the published sources for each host and locality record. A Host-Parasite List, list of References, a Parasite Index and a Host Index complete the volume.

Research in music, carried out as a form of academic dialogue, is in many ways rewarding, especially in the interwoven cultural situation of today's world such as in Malaysia.

The vast and diverse culture of music accumulated, transmitted and synthesized against the backdrop of social cultural history is asset of all human beings and deserve careful documentation and attentive observation. Close observation and analysis of music culture brings insights in furthering our understanding about what music is, the addition to existing knowledge of music, and also who we are, matters about self-identification. As for contextualizing music, a matter which involves actions and decision making that further relate to value judgement, as seen in issues like music policy, curriculum and pedagogy, academic dialogue is necessary not only to inspire new directions and approaches, but to cultivate a more careful and self-examining attitude, with deep understanding about the nature of music in approaching these matters. The Music Department of the Faculty of Human Ecology at Universiti Putra Malaysia started publishing research outcomes in form of proceedings since 1998. Since then, the Department Music has organized Colloquia for Music Research for five times. This present issue is the outcome of another attempt to cultivate research culture among music scholars without limiting subject and approach in music research. It is hoped that this issue will further invite and provoke interest and engagement in this field.

Pitaya, pitahaya or dragon fruit (Hylocereus spp.) is a group of desert plants native to the tropical forest regions of Mexico as well as Central and South America. This book elaborates on various pests and diseases, including some disorders commonly affect dragon fruits. Although the plants are relatively free from harmful pests and diseases in well managed fields, various pests and diseases do occur that eventually become serious in many plantations. Fungi and bacteria infecting the plants and fruits can lead to poor quality and unmarketable fruits, while slugs and snails will damage new growth. Birds and squirrels will not only feed on the fruits, but also will damage the green parts of the lower stems, leaving only the central cores. While this type of damage does not usually kill the plant, it should be prevented. Consumers, students, practicing plant pathologists, ecologists, pitaya growers will find this book an important foundational resource.

This book delivers the essence, fundamentals, and ways to go about doing qualitative research. This book contains materials gathered from the vast and varied qualitative research knowledge of Professor Pranee Liamputtong, a respectable qualitative researcher based at La Trobe University, Melbourne. Qualitative research in Malaysia found its way into the medical and social science education programs in the 1970's through the medical anthropology and medical sociology subjects offered at University of Malaya and Universiti Sains Malaysia. Since then there had been some substantial research on health related issues. The formation of the Qualitative Research Association of Malaysia in 2002 paved the way for the promotion of qualitative research through dissemination of information, exchange of ideas and experience, and facilitating collaboration between researchers from various fields of the humanities and social sciences, and health.

The Malaysian Furniture Industry: Unravelling its Growth and Challenges to Innovation

Jegatheswaran Ratnasingam

This book provides an overview of the furniture industry in Malaysia, followed by a discussion of its industrial structure, production characteristics, product types, design attributes, key actors of the industry, incentive schemes, health and safety issues, trade scenario and a detailed economic analysis its performance and how it measures up in the wake of growing competition from other emerging furniture producing nations, especially China and Vietnam. Although the furniture manufacturing sub-sector is the star-performer within the Malaysian wood products industry, contributing almost one-third of total export earnings and total employment in the wood products industry, it is dogged by weak value-adding, design and innovative dynamisms due to the structural features of the industry. Weak investments in human capital and innovation activities are undermining its ambitions of becoming a net exporter of high value-added, branded furniture. The government is the principal driver of the nation's wood products industry, and despite a sound industrial development framework, the furniture industry is characterized by low value-addition and poor design and innovation capabilities. Signs for the Malaysian furniture industry in its journey towards becoming an original-design and original-brand furniture manufacturer are however not obvious and limited. As this treatise has repeatedly emphasized, policy makers will do well to pay attention to aspects that will boost productivity, design capability, linkages and human capital development to improve the overall competitiveness of the Malaysian Furniture industry in the years ahead.
